“ Maya never missed an opportunity to make sure you felt her love. Her presence had a way of enveloping you and sealing you in spiritually... and physically with her long, strong arms :). Maya affected me in a way that even when we didn't live near each other, my soul longed to be around her, for proximity could not contain her presence. Maya could be felt in the songs I listened to, in words I read, in the Earth I touched, in the memories that refused to fade. There are some relationships that simply cannot be explained, for words could never do them justice. In the days since her passing, I've often thought to myself "What would Maya do"? That is because Maya was just so unapologetically Maya. She was not afraid to do what made her happy... to go where her heart longed to be, to live without boundaries, to not dwell, to exist in her truest form. Maya taught be that friendships come in all shapes and sizes, but that sisterhood was forever. And forever you will be in our hearts, my love. Sending peace and love to all of her family and friends.

“ Renata, Xavier -

*There are no words that can console when a child is lost.
This is not normal. Not natural. Not real. Not fair.
Most of all, IT IS NOT FAIR.*

And yet, it happens.

*The photo you choose is perfect!
She is so wonderful, so happy, so beautiful!*

*And one day, when the inconsolable pain, the unrelenting disbelief, the horror of her loss finally recedes, and it will (as it always does)...
Maya will be with you, as she was in life - vibrant, loving and now unchanging.*

Your hearts have broken, but they will heal, and your Maya will always be in them to comfort you.

*Love, and hope, to you both,
Benito*

Renanta and Mr.X I am so so sorry

I have a few warm memories of Miss Maya she played and danced and helped cut the cake with my neice Amanda on my wedding day 1995 she was 6 years old.

One day she came for a visit she made these little bitty paper rose buds, they had so much detail, i just LoVed them and still enjoy them and keep in a special jewelery box.

My Prayers for her light

My prayers to all her Family and Friends

My prayers to you Renanta and Xavier
